A New Era of Confidence

Goodbye, 2022. You were real.

Throughout the last 12 months, the global TikTok community reimagined entertainment. They shared personal stories of real moments and passions that brought communities together and helped users discover new ways of thinking.

After quarantine, people realized they didn't have to keep living life as they always had and adhering to social norms. As they saw different points of view on TikTok, new ideas started spreading across cultures traditional life milestones

#DigitalNomad

Now we say hello to 2023.

This year, the community will inspire each other to make changes in their lives with newfound confidence.

Content on TikTok is so relatable, users often take action based on what they see on their For You page. Sometimes that action is simple, such as buying a product or trying a recipe.

But in 2023, the platform's influence will deepen. People will continue to reflect on their values in a world that's bringing inflation, health and climate issues, and personal stress. Amidst all that, they'll seek out new paths to success, happiness, and well-being—and TikTok will be a tool to help them find it.

What you'll find in this report:

3 key Forces driving TikTok culture in 2023

Underlying Signals for each Force

Key takeaways and creative approaches to help you plan ahead

Trend Force 1

Actionable Entertainment

Tailor-made content on TikTok inspires people to take action

Overview

On other platforms, content is "personalized" based on broad identity categories or simple browsing histories. But on TikTok, content is curated based on what viewers find entertaining, so it captures their attention and trust.

The attention comes from the quality of TikTok content. Creators are gifted storytellers who understand the value of humor, perfectly-timed audio, pacing, and helpful advice—so they're able to quickly pull in their viewers.

The trust is a result of who's making the content. When a viewer sees a video from a Creator they can relate to (like someone with the same hair type as them) or from an expert (like a hairstylist with 20+ years of experience,) they're more likely to take the information to heart. That's why ideas take off so quickly on TikTok and give people the confidence to take action. They're hearing compelling stories from real people.

What's Next?

In 2023, TikTok-first entertainment will inspire people to test out new products and ways of thinking and behaving.

Community-Built Ideals

TikTok's communities are relatable and supportive, which inspires people to make changes in their lives.

Overview

TikTok communities are a cut above the rest because they're specific—and that's what helps them thrive at scale. The platform isn't just a place to find fellow moms and gamers. It's a place to connect with other #TiredMoms who face the same day-to-day stressors that you do and get inspired by #CozyGamers who prioritize laid-back, stress-free gaming.

Hyper-niche interests help users bond with each other. From there, they broaden each other's horizons. Maybe the #TiredMom on your FYP shows you a five-minute hairstyle she does on her daughter and you give it a try. Maybe the #CozyGamer listens to specific music while they're playing, so you listen to those tunes, too. Essentially, TikTok is not a town hall meeting. It's a collection of tiny clubs where people can find new ideas on how to explore their passions and live their lives. And as people seek out ways to break the status quo, they'll look to peers and role models who have the confidence to live life the way they want to.

What's Next?

It's not just about aspiration. It's about users finding people who fundamentally understand them, which inspires them to change things for themselves.

TikTok is 1.8x more likely to introduce users to new topics they didn't even know they liked¹
